Highway man

WEST Yorkshire highway engineering consultants Sanderson Associates have appointed a new engineering technician.

Lee Foxon, who is based at the company's headquarters at Grange Moor, near Huddersfield, is a member of one of the firm's detailed design teams, where he will be working on major highways and development projects.

Alison France, managing director of Sanderson Associates, said: "Lee's appointment is good news for all of us. After a period of consolidation during the economic downturn, we are now looking to expand again.

"We are especially pleased to employ Lee, as he had recently been made redundant by a housing company as a result of the property market crash. We are confident he will become a valued member of our close-knit and talented team."

Sanderson Associates employs 40 staff and is working on highway, transportation and water engineering projects across Britain. This year the company was named Business of the Month in a competition run by West Yorkshire solicitors Eaton Smith and the Mid Yorkshire Chamber of Commerce.
