

Answers in site for the curious

So what exactly does a highway engineer do?

Do I need one?... and this looks like an interesting field of work – so how do I become one?

In response to these questions which it is regularly asked, Sanderson has sponsored a new website which gives an insight into work within highways and transportation, and seeks to explain, in an easily-understandable manner, some of the technical aspects of our world.

Links are also included for further reading, where necessary. The site will be of general interest to many in the development industry and may also set young people on the 'first step on your road' to becoming one of us.